Furthering info from last quarter
I learned more about different subjects and periods in feminist theory and gender studies. The course challenges you to consider more unspoken ramifications of institutional practices. In particular, the course tackles varied perceptions of the self and poses questions of identity.
queer and feminist theories
queer, power, intersectionality, politics

Describe how aspects of this course (lectures, discussions, labs, assignments, etc.) contributed to your learning.

Comments
The lectures were good but I liked the readings
The readings were very interesting, if not time–consuming because of their density. They were critical and theoretical papers, with a few odd exceptions. Discussions were helpful because it was a space to pose any confusion and questions.
i like the breaking down of assignment into shorter papers Lectures are very helpful for understanding the readings. I really like the format of having mini–lectures before discussions because it made our discussion much more fruitful.

Thinking about your time in the class, what aspect of the instructor's teaching contributed most to your learning?

Comments
her passion for the subject
Professor Rhiannon let students direct discussions, only stepping in to provide guidance and structure. She was very open to respecting interpretation and provoked further thinking in our breakdowns.
lecture and office hours

What could the instructor modify to help you learn more?

Comments
posting slides/info from class Discussions could be slow, perhaps incorporate more structure in them. The discussions tended to be text–based, soley breaking down ideas. It might incite students to participate in discussion if the texts were broken down AND applied to outside contexts. Conversations are bound to be dull in a classroom if they depend on breaking down very confusing ideas. I don't think this is the Professor's fault per say, so maybe the department should enforce this method of text analysis all around. the prof is very passionate about course materials but i find it hard to concentrate fully when she talks/lectures at us for a long time. class atmosphere was less active than my 1st quarter not really
