Comments
I enjoyed both the lectures and the labs; we got to practice with equipment in class before being expected to complete our assignments
Lectures were sort of helpful but most of the learning happened when we had to shoot and edit our own films.
Mostly discussion and labs and some lectures. These were organized great and wouldn't have changed how Catherine set it up.
The in-class and outside-of-class assignments were particularly helpful since they forced you to use the ideas discussed in class in whatever way interested you (the professor was also very flexible with whatever you were interested in).

Thinking about your time in the class, what aspect of the instructor's teaching contributed most to your learning?

Comments
Her feedback was always constructive and helpful. Her lectures were also clear and the group activities were enjoyable. She was very understanding about some of the deadlines that I missed.
Reviewing other students films helped me understand what made for a good and bad film.
Discussing video examples shown in class
She was just a great lecturer and presence in the classroom. Always an enjoyable day to have class.
The assignments were purposefully very open-ended. which I think was really helpful to get an idea of how to execute the idea you envision with the techniques discussed in class.

What could the instructor modify to help you learn more?

Be more harsh when critiquing students films so we could know what to improve more.

Not intimidating at all; felt like it was very accessible curriculum
I had no experience and it was not hard
Easy but shooting and editing were time consuming
I had no background but it wasn't hard at all. Just do the work you're assigned and you're probably guaranteed an A
