| The textbook is horrible to self studying but Okamoto Sensei tried his best to make it better for us. |
| Sensei often expanded on the grammar and explained the text from the textbook more thoroughly which helped me to understand them better |
| The textbook at times had confusing or incorrect explanations for certain words or phrases. |

It's just common vocab. Some might be a bit old–fashioned but it's overall not bad.
Without learning the vocabulary, you really can't make complex sentences and say what you want.

Describe the format of the class (lecture, drills, etc.). Was this format productive? Please be specific.

Personally, I am better at writing Japanese than speaking it because speaking requires thinking on the spot and you can't really double check to make sure your sentences are correct. Plus, the instructors speak relatively fast so I often miss what they say and misinterpret their questions.

| would try his best to explain Japanese grammar in English terms, which is really hard because the english terms can have different connotations but the Japanese grammars are often very specific and specialized cases. |
