This quarter was the third and final quarter of this sequence class. It is fascinating to learn aspects of the class under very different circumstances yet with the same professor and the same class. The most important thing for me is to learn about the way the concept of "power" can be understood in the context of political philosophy.
throughout the spring quarter we learned about morality, race relations, and the "other". This quarter was very interesting and relevant to today. I have learned to read difficult philosophical texts
How to make argumentative essays and more of the modern texts.
How to read difficult material and think independently. Writing well also
I learned a lot about various topics. The reading went all around, discussing issues and identities of different races, genders, or even species.

Describe how aspects of this course (lectures, discussions, labs, assignments, etc.) contributed to your learning.

Discussions make this class a lot more accessible to me and I believe to many of my peers as well. A lot of the readings for this class are quite challenging hence having discussions about all of them makes it easier to make sense of those readings. Without the discussions, I think I would not be able to understand all of the readings required in the syllabus.
class discussions were always very good and helped me gain insight to different perspectives. Also, some of the readings are hard to digest, so being able to talk about the readings with classmates and the professor was very helpful to understand.
The lectures were really important in explaining the more difficult text sections.
In class discussions were very helpful.

Thinking about your time in the class, what aspect of the instructor's teaching contributed most to your learning?

The instructor was willing to sacrifice a portion of the class to stick to specific passages in order to make sure everyone understood what was going on. He would rather do that and get a bit less covered and then make up for it, rather than strictly sticking to the syllabus but ending up having a portion of the class remain confused.
class discussions were facilitated very productively. We presented questions at the beginning of class which is thought was a good way to engage conversation give a chance for everyone to participate. I also really liked how sometimes we focused on opening the conversation up to our own opinions rather than focusing on what the book says.
His explanation of guiding us through the text and the technical details that the authors used but did not properly explain.
Corbin is a great facilitator. He asks good questions and fosters good discussion.
The in class discussions were very helpful. Prof Page is very kind and makes sure everyone is heard. He also helps us understand the text very well during discussions.

What could the instructor modify to help you learn more?

Comments
Everything has been great for all three quarters.
maybe some reading questions before hand to think about
Maybe at the beginning of every reading a short summary or list of things to look out for might be helpful.
Maybe more updates on current grades. It's fine though
