The textbook is not formatted super intuitively but Okamoto Sensei does a good job of presenting all of the content more clearly in class

The textbook is incredibly outdated and is being replaced next year, so Okamoto–sensei organized the information in better and concise ways on his own slides.

Comments
Most of the vocab was coming from the grammar we were learning and was suited for things we were saying frequently so all of the vocab felt useful for the most part
Hard to remember all the vocab, especially when we came back to it after a couple weeks that we spent on other grammar.

Describe the format of the class (lecture, drills, etc.). Was this format productive? Please be specific.

Comments
We go through powerpoints with new grammar and then do drills out loud and then have some free speaking portions. Emphasis was mostly placed on grammar and constructing coherent sentences in class
Regular lessons that involved a lot of back and forth with exercises from the instructor. This format was very productive, but I feel like we could have benefited from being able to practice what we learned for more time.

Very occasionally forgot class material in his office, but there weren't many incidents of it.

Went from knowing no Japanese to having a novice understanding.

How would you improve this course?

Comments
I think more comparisons to English grammar would be good. For example I didn't at all understand the 'ni' particle until I figured out by myself that it marked indirect objects and subjects.

Well–structured for a language class, though challenging.
